【Program Title】

Human Resource Development of International Young Scholars in Collaboration with the “Todai- Yale Initiative”

【Program details】1. Training young researchers capable of working within an international environment.

The aim of the current program is, on the basis of the strong cooperation already existing between the University of Tokyo and Yale University, to send young researchers from the University of Tokyo working in the field of Japanese Studies and the Japan -related humanities and social sciences to Yale University, and to help these young researchers cultivate an international perspective. Young researchers sent through this program shall pursue their individual research themes, work closely with faculty and young researchers at Yale University, and acquire the qualities vital for independent research. The goal of the program is to develop the next generation of researchers in Japan studies and Japan-related areas, who will both lead and internationalize the field.

2. Revitalizing Japanese Studies in the United States.

This program aims to further enrich the strong Japanese studies at Yale University. We hope that the young researchers to be sent to Yale University will provide intellectual stimulation to Japanese Studies at Yale, develop a network of Japanese Studies researchers in the United States through symposia, workshops and other activities, and eventually create an enduring exchange relationship which is beneficial to both the University of Tokyo and Yale University.

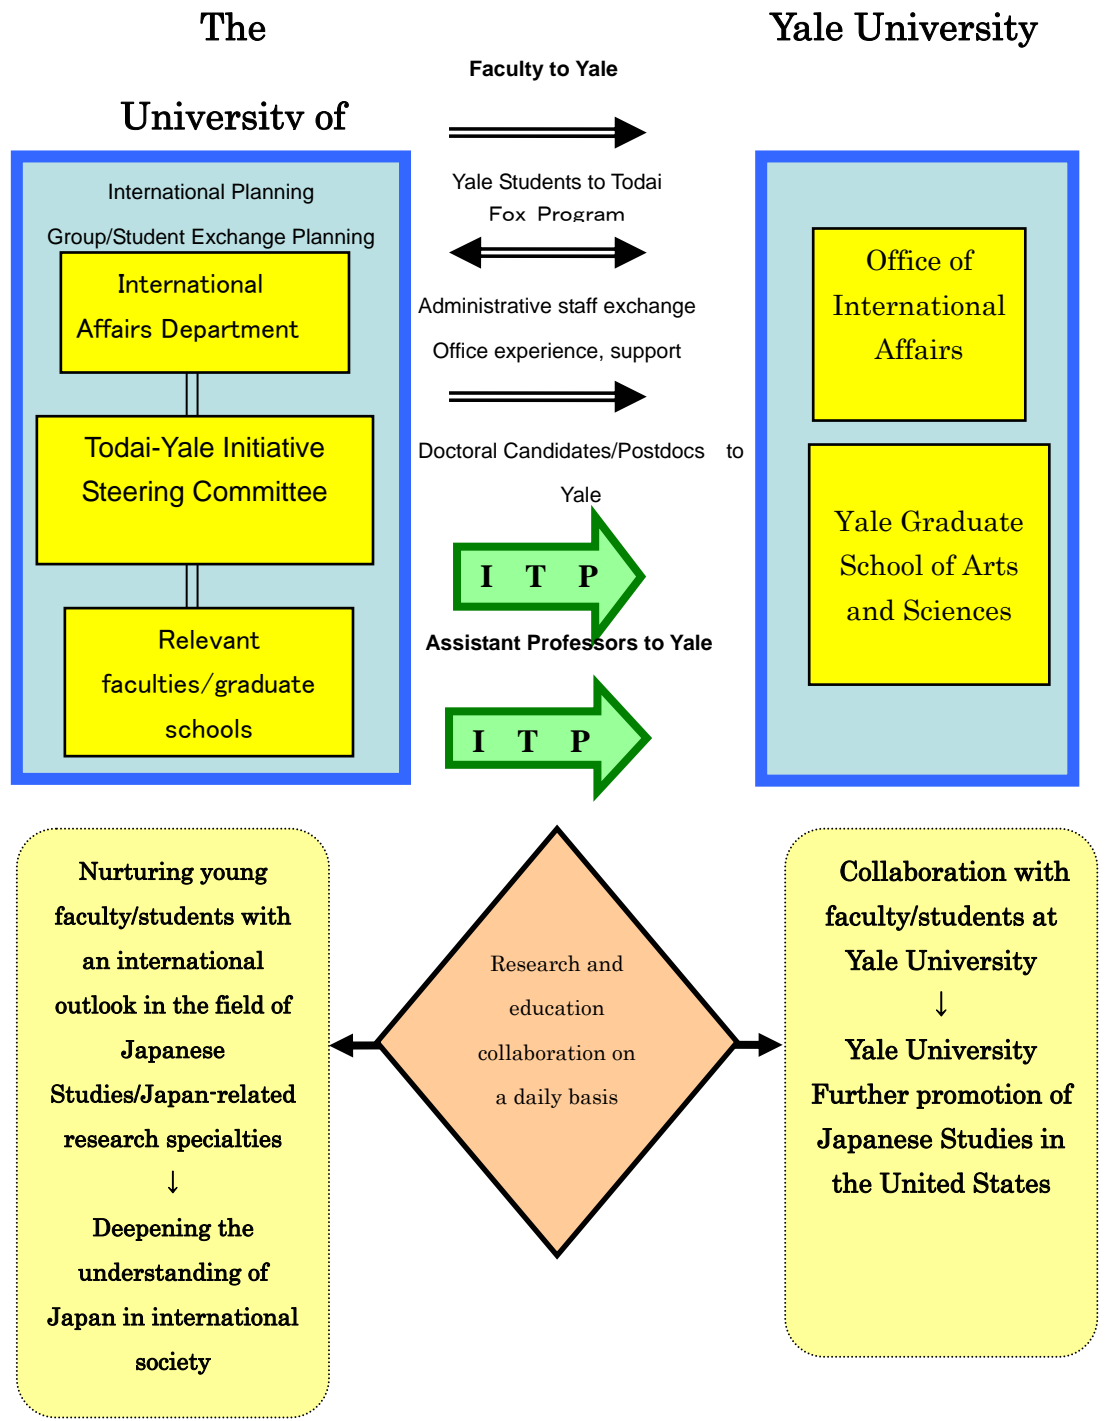

3. Activities extending beyond the training of young researchers after program completion.

A network of researchers in the field of Japanese Studies and the Japan-related humanities and social sciences will be firmly established through the intellectual exchanges promoted by this program, and after the completion of the program, we hope that this network will lead to generating young researchers capable of leading the next generation of Japanese Studies.
