DIALOGUE

WHAT'S THE SCIENCE DIALOGUE?

The program offers JSPS Overseas Fellows the unique opportunities to volunteer to give lectures in English on their research work at high schools in the vicinity of their host institutes.

The aim of the lectures is to stimulate the young students' interest in research and deepen their understanding of science from a global point of view through interacting with overseas fellows. As for the fellows, the participation in the program will be an enjoyable opportunity to communicate with the local community and strengthen their ties with Japan.

COMMENT FROM AN AMERICAN RESEARCHER

I am very passionate about encouraging students to pursue a career in science and felt like this was a good opportunity to do so. I found this program to be very meaningful for my fellowship activities. I believe as a scientist that the most critical skill outside of actual research is the ability to communicate our findings to the general public. I found that this was a great opportunity for me to practice such a skill.

I hope that the students benefited in multiple ways, including learning more about what it means to pursue a career in scientific research, getting to interact with somebody from a different culture and ask questions that they may not have otherwise had a chance to, and practicing English with an overseas speaker.

How to participate in the program?

JSPS issues a continuous call for applications from JSPS fellows.
Please be sure to read the Guidelines on our website before application.
